

Etere Adds Transwrapping to Etere Transcoder

Etere enhances its transcoding capabilities with transwrapping that allows transcoding without re-encoding for a better efficiency. This is a FREE upgrade included in ETERE 32.2

Etere transcoder decode, encode, transcode, mux, demux and filter almost any media

Etere Transcoder includes a Transwrapping feature that allows transcoding without re-encoding. The new features enable users to trim a local file, capture a network stream to a local file, or transcode a list of files in a single file of the same or different container. In this process, the software extracts data packets from a source and the same packets can be used to create new frames in the output file. Subsequently, when the packets are processed within a single thread and they remain unchanged. Etere sets a new bar of efficiency for its transcoding process.

The Transwrapping Technology can be used when there is no format change between inputs and outputs, this technology allows faster processing about 50 times faster, and also has no quality degradation in comparison with the traditional transcoding.

The software update is a free release for all Etere users on a support contract. Etere is a system that evolves with you. Etere users on a support contract have access to unlimited software updates and upgrades, giving you the best returns for your investment.
